CALL BEFORE YOU DO ANYTHING ELSE IN THESE SIX SITUATIONS

1

Serious Injury or Fatality

Call 911 first. Then call GigLine immediately — before you speak to anyone else, before you move anything, before you file any paperwork.

Note: Preserve the scene. Do not move equipment or materials until instructed.

2

OSHA Arrives at Your Front Door

Ask the inspector to wait in the lobby or outside. Call GigLine immediately. Do not begin the inspection until you have spoken with Vince.

Note: You have the right to request a brief delay to contact your safety consultant. Exercise it.

3

A Near-Miss That Could Have Been Serious

Call GigLine before the end of the shift. Near-misses predict future injuries. Document what happened while memories are fresh.

Note: Do not minimize it. If someone almost got hurt, it counts.

4

An Employee Files a Safety Complaint

Call GigLine before responding to the employee or taking any corrective action. Document the complaint in writing immediately.

Note: Retaliation against an employee who files a safety complaint is a federal violation.

5

A Condition You Don't Know How to Fix

Do not guess. Do not improvise. Call GigLine and describe the condition. You will get a plain-language answer — not a bill.

Note: Guessing wrong on a safety condition can turn a $2,000 fix into a $16,550 citation.

6

A Workers' Compensation Claim Is Filed

Call GigLine before discussing the claim with the employee, the insurer, or anyone else. The first conversation sets the tone for everything that follows.

Note: Do not admit fault or deny the claim before speaking with your safety consultant.

GigLine does not charge for emergency calls. When you call about an active OSHA inspection, a serious injury, or a condition you are unsure about — there is no invoice. That is the point of this card.
