

Employee Safety Training Record Log

29 CFR 1910.1200(h)(3) — Employers must document all HazCom training with employee name, date, and topics covered.

Estimated Compliance Value: $2,000–$16,550 per citation

Failure to document employee training is a citable violation under 29 CFR 1910.1200(h). Training records must be retained indefinitely.

What This Document Proves in an OSHA Inspection

This log is your proof that employees received required safety training. When an inspector asks 'How do you know your employees understand the hazards they work with?' — you hand them this log. Without signed training records, OSHA assumes training did not happen. Retain this log indefinitely — OSHA can request training records from years ago.

Instructions

Complete one Training Session block for each training session conducted. Every employee who attended must sign the attendance log. Keep this log on file permanently — do not discard after an employee leaves. OSHA may request training records for former employees.

Required for: Initial hire training, new chemical introduction, role change, annual refresher, and any time a new hazard is identified.

Retention Requirement

Retain all training records indefinitely. OSHA can request training records from years ago, including for employees who are no longer with the company. Store in a secure location accessible to management. Do not discard training records when an employee leaves.
